

CHILDREN'S SPEECH AND LANGUAGE THERAPY SERVICE

Helping your child make friendships

- Before your child meets up with their friend, have a think about what is going to happen. You could draw a cartoon strip or write a simple story together. This is good for helping your child to prepare and understand new situations with other children.
- Discuss what a friend is:
 - Friends stay and play with each other
 - Friends like to ask each other questions to find out what they like
 - Friends look at each other and listen to what they are saying
 - Friends say nice things to each other
- Use pictures, photos, drawings or written reminders of things your child may want to say. You can stick these up at home or in school

- Help your child feel comfortable; visit places where they can be around other children such as play areas, youth centres, sports clubs etc. Some organisations such as the Down's syndrome Association and the National Autistic Society may run specific events that could be appropriate for your child to attend.
- Activities with a sense of 'working together' are great for encouraging talking. (Make a snack, make a den, tower, make a scene for an action movie/play)
- Create tasks or games to encourage your child to play and talk to their new friend. Some children may benefit from a little bit of support from you for example, "why don't you build a house out of the Lego" or "why don't you show your friend your new board game" Allow your child time to get to know their new friends but step in if your child needs help to get things moving.
- Games with rules (such as monopoly, connect 4, board games, bingo, catch or hide and seek) can provide lots of opportunity to practise turn taking in a more structured but fun way (you may need to step in to talk about winning and losing!).
